Marjorie M. Smith EDITOR-PUBLISHER

THE Musical Box Society International was founded in 1949 as The Musical Box Hobbyists. Today, their membership of more than 150 includes members in 29 States and 4 foreign countries. A study of the roster indicates that over 75% collect music boxes only, while the remainder (some of whom also belong to other societies) combine this interest with collections in various and sundry other antiques items.

From the small nucleus of the three connoisseurs who met together in 1949, the society has developed to its present size and includes such music box experts and authors as Roy Mosoriak and Glenn P. Heckert (The Curious History of Music Boxes) and John E. T. Clark (Musical Boxes) among its ranks. The latest research in the field is shared through a Bulletin published every two months, interspersed with monographs which cover subjects ranging from "The Origin and Development of The Music Box" to "Repairing Musical Boxes". The Mart, a mimeographed sheet, issued at intervals, is designed to help members improve their markets and enable them to obtain needed items and repairs. It disseminates enough news about individual members to keep alive warm personal relationships from one meeting to the next.

Annual meetings are usually held at the homes of advanced collector members where the group has the opportunity to inspect, hear, and discuss the history, merits, and intricacies of their all-absorbing interest. At a long-to-be remembered such meeting as guests of the Ford Museum and Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Michigan, they were afforded a special display of valuable old musical box museum pieces.

This is merely a short resume of one society and especially for those of you who will be enlightened and inspired by this month's texts Music Boxes, page 20 and Miracle in Music Box Restoration, page 26. It could just as easily be the story of any one of the more than 500 National Associations and Societies that exist in the United States today, more than 20% of which are within the field of antiques and related subjects. The important part is that it is the story of three people who through interest, knowledge, and appreciation of a single subject were able to keep it from slipping to possible oblivion by extending it beyond their own circle. Not only has it offered rich rewards in higher education and better business, but with such national scope, has removed geographical barriers and produced lifelong friendships among peoples drawn together by a mutual interest.

An antiques enthusiast who does not belong to some society is missing a great bit of the fun of collecting. There's one for almost every field of interest and some that cover various fields. If you are interested in such an affiliation a card to our offices will bring you the information . . . . and if, on the slightest chance you're a student of a subject not on the list, you'll have the wonderful opportunity of doing for collectors in your field, what the three pioneers did for the Musical Box Society . . . . forming one of your own.

HISTORIC ANNAPOLIS—AND THE NAVY: The Fall Open House Tour of Historic Annapolis has taken as its theme this year The Navy—Its Part in Historic Annapolis . . . and October 27 is the day set for the tour which will include many historic houses, owned and occupied, often restored, by Navy families. In one Colonial house on Duke of Gloucester Street, owned by Mrs. Charles Slayton, widow of Navy Captain Slayton, will be seen window draperies of fabulous "tribute silk". These fabrics, presented to the Empress of China by her provinces are aptly named—and rarely beautiful. Magnificent furniture, china, and other treasures of the Orient, brought to Annapolis by Naval officers, will be seen in many of these old homes. In addition, an Heirlooms Show of noteworthy collections, and in many instances "museum pieces", will be assembled at one location. Pictured are some of the important Oriental pieces that will be part of this display. And please, before you go to steep yourselves in the treasures of the East, do have read Pearl Buck's Imperial Woman. This bit of background history will add enjoyment and a realization of the almost incredible sumptuousness of the Oriental palaces where many of these treasures were once in daily use.

TRAVELLING MAP, COLLECTORS: The Waukesha County, Wisconsin, Antiques Dealers are out with their new summer map showing their locations. It's large enough to follow easily with route numbers well marked, and bristling with fascinating Indian place names. Trippers through Wisconsin will want one of these handy guides—and it's to Willard and Marion Melville, you may write for one. They're at Braeburn View Antiques, in Colgate, Wisconsin. (They have a free museum, too.)

SUCH NICE THINGS HAPPEN: In the March '56 Memo, we mentioned the collection of coverlets assembled by Mrs. W. T. Daum of Villa Nova, Illinois, and her interest in the Colonial Coverlet Guild of America. Not long after, we had a happy and excited note from Mrs. Daum, saying that Ida Lee, one of our New York City readers (and advertisers) had seen the story and written her to say she had a pair of Virginia coverlets she did not care to keep and that Mrs. Daum might have them for the asking. We can imagine there was some little correspondence between the two ladies for Mrs. Daum was hesitant to accept so precious a gift. But last week we heard again from Mrs. Daum: "What a thrill! The parcel post from Ida Lee came today, and it's just about the nicest thing that has happened to me in many a day. My cousins who were here when the postman came were just as excited and pleased as I was. We spread the two lengths of coverlet out upon my cannon

Dear Old Days - - and Dolls

The articles on doll marks are very interesting and I save them all for future reference. The picture enclosed shows the doll I made from a pincushion doll and dressed as Alice Faye when she acted Lillian Russell.

Advertising Notes

So far I have had 16 answers to my want ad for flower containers. Many sent pictures, drawings, voluminous correspondence . . . 4 from Massachusetts, 4 from Pennsylvania, 2 from Indiana, 1 each from Illinois, New York, Maryland, Oklahoma, Montana and Minnesota. I thought you might be interested in the places reached and heard from. The far places are a long way to send on approval and I hate to buy without seeing but most have suggested a return if I did not like the pieces.

A Use for Reproductions

Several years ago when I knew very little about pattern glass, an unscrupulous dealer loaded me with reproductions, then denied it and refused to do anything about it. Instead of pitching them in the trash can or giving them away as I first thought of doing, I kept them as a warning. Later when I opened a little shop, I was perturbed over reproductions but I knew I didn't want to handle them. My solution is an exhibit in the making to be labeled "Not for Sale." Then as I can buy genuine pattern glass to display, I'll pair the good and reproduction for all to compare. Several dealers of long standing think I have a good idea. One dealer says she will lend me several old pieces (naturally I'll give her credit) from her large stock.

Our Contributors Say

A writer may make 1000 correct statements without one comment—one error, and there will be 1000 comments! In the Santa Ana doll story (june '56), the caption description under the second picture should have read, "Marie Antoinette with Blue Sickle mark of the Passau factory", not "Blue Circle." Also I'd like to make clear that the Santa Ana Doll Show is not necessarily an annual affair. It was not held last year, but was held the year before that. However, it will be held in 1957, so Easterners attending the Federation Doll Convention in San Francisco can see this fabulous exhibit. Already the San Francisco Convention chairman and Mrs. Coulter, curator of the Santa Ana museum, are working together in their advance planning.

Today's mail brought the advance sheets of my article Buttons with Egyptian Motifs . . . (May '56 issue) and I have only praise for your editing. If you are wondering about the star on the side of the picture, it was the symbol of a first prize at the National Show. The ribbons covered up so many buttons that it was decided to put stars on of different colors, and later distribute the ribbons.

Thank you for liking my buttons—I adore them.

This Reminds Me

I came upon the enclosed loose page among some old papers and was amazed at the resemblance to the buggy or carriage used in the ad on page 3 of your April isusue. I believe this came from an old Nursery Magazine as it resembles some I have for 1876, and the ads on the reverse are similar.

The American Antiquarian Society

A Fabulous Treasury of Rare Americana

By P. K. Thomajan

MECCA for historical scholars is the American Antiquarian Society in the heart of the Commonwealth, the City of Worcester, founded by Isaiah Thomas, early American printer and Revolutionary patriot, in the year 1812.

Hardly a single historical book of any significance has been written without drawing on the vast material lodged in this library. Here have come such scholars as Albert Bushnell Hart, James Truslow Adams, and Albert J. Beveridge to complete their works. The crowded shelves are filled with autographed volumes sent by authors, as a slight token of their gratitude for the invaluable aid rendered.

The library has twenty miles of shelving and contains over a million titles. This is the strongest collection of printed material in existence relating to American history from 1620 to 1820, and in some fields, such as literature, graphic arts, and newspapers, is the strongest down to a later date. Among other collections, it contains nearly every American local and county genealogy. One may safely venture the remark that no major work can be done in the field of American history without using the resources of this library.

Membership in the Society is honorary and limited to two hundred. There are no fees attending the privilege of membership, and eligibility is on the basis of an interest in historical scholarship and the advancement of this cause.

Meetings are held twice a year, one in Worcester and the other in Boston, at which occasions scholarly papers are read by members, which later appear in the Society's official publication, the "Proceedings." In the long series of "Proceedings," which have been published regularly since October 1849, are to be found many papers and monographs of great historical importance, written by the leading historians of the country.

The roster of the Society has included not only every great historian interested in American history but also many of the leading public men of our nation. Twelve presidents of the country have been members and Calvin Coolidge was president of the Society at the time of his death.

The early start of this library, a little over a quarter century after the independence of the nation, enabled it to acquire items that would today be improcurable. One might say that the spirit of nationalism inspired the formation of this organization, the desire to protect national literary resources and records of our beginnings.

In the early years of its history, this library acquired the libraries of many scholars and divines, notably the bulk of the private library of the Mather family. The core of the collection was Isaiah Thomas' private library, which was among the foremost in the country at the time.

The Society, through the years, has adhered faithfully to its initial purpose — "the collection and preservation of the antiquities of our country, and of curious and most valuable productions of art and nature (which) have a tendency to enlarge the sphere of human knowledge, aid in the progress of science, to perpetuate the history of moral and political events, and to improve and instruct posterity."

Since 1908, Clarence S. Brigham has presided as librarian, and later as director, and during his regime the library has quadrupled in size and has achieved stellar prominence in the field of Americana. The building and setting of this library befit its august character. The structure is of red brick with a white marble trim. The front facade suggests the charm and dignity of colonial architecture.

The most used part of the library is the newspaper collection, which numbers 18,000 bound volumes and portfolios—the finest existing collection for the period from 1704 through

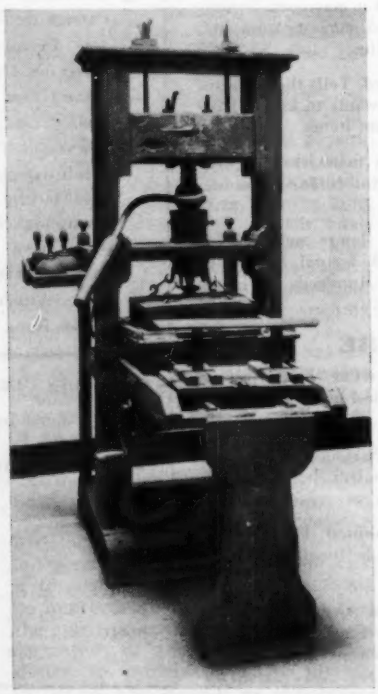
One of Isaiah Thomas' famous American juveniles.

1820. Included is the first issue of the first regular newspaper published in North America, the Boston News-Letter, dated 1704—this is one of three known copies. Great care is taken to preserve these early newspapers and to keep their contents intact.

The most intensely American type of publication is the almanac, of which the library has the most extensive collection in existence, for it includes fully ninety percent of those printed before 1850.



Old English press used by Isaiah Thomas in the eighteenth century.

Historians have not always appreciated the importance or value of the almanac as a source, though here they may find the beginning of the short story, of American humor, our earliest mathematical and astronomical calculations, native American sayings, proverbs and allegories, which did much to mould the character of the nation, patriotic and political essays, the beginnings of the graphic arts, especially of political caricature, early agriculture, medicine, and domestic economy. When we remember that the average American pioneer family owned only two books, a Bible and the current almanac, the influence of this ephemeral form of literature should be obvious and its importance appreciated. One might well say that the almanac was the most popular colonial American publication.

The literary annual and gift book, which was so popular between 1825 and the Civil War, falls within this classification. During this important period, we were developing a national literature and our great poets, essayists and novelists were beginning to stretch their wings. Many of their important contributions to our literature first appeared in the literary annual, which graced every drawing-room table for over a half a century. These were characterized by gaudy bindings and sentimental steel engravings. The Society collection contains over seven hundred of these romantic relics.

Toys Build A Museum

By Mollie Somerville

THE twenty-year old hobby of two New England ladies has resulted in a unique venture, a Toy Museum. The idea materialized when Mrs. Moss Baratz and Mrs. Woodward H. Griswold decided to combine their mutual interest — collecting miniatures — in such a way that others, too, could enjoy and learn from their collections.

The museum is composed of many and varied rooms; kitchens, bedrooms, living and dining rooms, replicas in miniature, depicting life since Colonial days. In addition there are complete doll houses whose occupants are busily engaged in the daily activities of their time. Of these, the century old model, containing its original furniture, is considered the most valuable. In it a quaintly dressed rag doll sits in a cast-iron rocking chair; the tiny bed has side hangings which swing shut to keep out the night air, thought unhealthy by our ancestors.

In contrast is the museum's largest doll house, furnished for a well-to-do family of 1910. Silver candelabra on the mahogany sideboard, crystal decanter with glasses, a tea set in Limoges, all in miniature, grace the dining room. The highly polished table is set for dinner with sterling silver, flat-and hollow-ware, complete even to the last detail — a tiny ladle in the covered tureen. And, these miniature reproduction furnishings are functional. Covers on the china and silver dishes are removable, tea can be poured from the teapot, cups and glasses hold liquids, yet the scale is only one inch to one foot. A remarkable example of the workability of these tiny gems is the pair of beautiful coal oil, wall lamps, whose glass chimneys can be removed for cleaning.

After the museum was opened, directly across from the post office in Old Lyme, Connecticut, many gifts were contributed. A Norwegian sea captain made a miniature copy of a captain's chest, while his wife crocheted a brightly colored afghan fashioned of tiny squares, barely a third of an inch in size. Mrs. Griswold's octogenarian mother sewed a tiny patchwork quilt. But perhaps the most unusual gift is the group of framed, miniature oil paintings, signed by the artists.

The displays are ever changing, and now other collectors can enjoy this petite world of yesteryear on Tuesday through Saturday afternoons. A nominal admission is charged.

Attracting Keen Interest At The Antiques Dealers' Fair In Great Britain Was The . .

Royal Loan Exhibit

By Joan Ranzenhofer

Photographs Reproduced By Gracious Permission Of Her Majesty The Queen.

IN London on June 13th, under the patronage of H.M. Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, the 16th Antiques Dealers' Fair and Exhibition was opened by Lady Eden.

Highlighting the show, as usual, was the Royal Loan group. This year Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth lent a silver-gilt rose water dish, ewer and pair of fire dogs (see illus.). H.M. The Queen Mother sent a rare lacquer cabinet which was at one time in the Hearst Collection.

Two (of a set of four) silver entree dishes and covers made by Richard Cooks in 1804 for Queen Charlotte, and warmers made by Phillip Rundell in 1820 were H.R.H. The Duke of Gloucester's loan, while The Princess Royal furnished candelabrum of a Derbyshire Spa vase in purple and gray, mounted in ormolu, with ormolu festoons and scrolls forming branches for four lights. A group of Chinese jades from the Ch'ien Lung Dynasty (1736-1795) consisting of a pair of bowls in brilliant translucent moss green and a moss green jade wine ewer carved with a floral design in relief, lent by the Duchess of Kent, completed the Royal loan group.

The opportunity to examine this fine group and to see and purchase pre-1830 antiques from 87 British dealers, was enjoyed this year by antiques enthusiasts from around the world. The cosmopolitan accent was most pronounced as Indian saris brushed against American minks and English tweeds in the Great Hall of the elegant Grosvenor House on Park Lane.

Top, one of a pair of 17" silver gilt fire dogs mounted on ebony. Figure of a young Bacchus stands on the square pedestal engraved with insignia of Order of the Garter. Lower parts stamped with London date-letter for 1696-7 and maker's mark A.M., probably for Andrew Moore. Pedestals and figures were added in 1821. _(Bottom)_ silver gilt rose water dish and ewer bearing London date letter for 1595-96. Maker's mark is TN above a rose, in a shield.

Miracle in

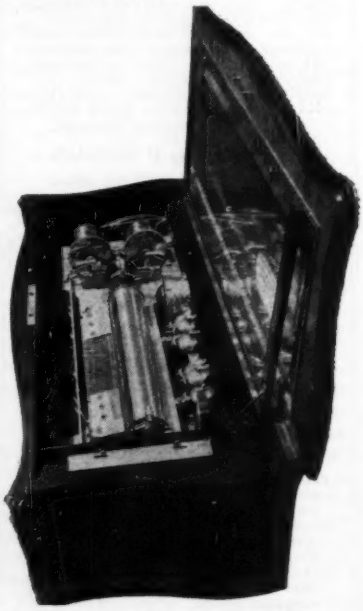
Music Box Restoration

SENSATIONAL in 1900 was the announcement that an old Swiss music box, manufactured in Geneva in 1864, had been modernized to run electrically. Now, fifty years later, an even more sensational feat was accomplished when the Bornand Music Box people of Pelham, New York, restored this same rare antique music box to its original 1864 condition!

This was by no means a simple task, for when the music box was brought to the shop, the cabinet was in at least a hundred pieces. The base of the cabinet was entirely apart, doors off, back splintered, even the four drawers, holding ten cylinders, were apart. The music box mechanism and top case had been dumped upside down on the floor. Even one of the cylinders had been left in the mechanism. The glass top and mirror were smashed, and only by some miracle, no damage was done to the comb itself. In addition, both spring barrels and both governors of the mechanism had been removed and replaced with an electric mechanism by its in-the-mode owner fifty-five years before.

The problem the Bornands faced was to restore the music box to its original condition — a task made all the more difficult as the mechanism was unusual, built with a 36-note organ that had a separate governor arrangement, plus combs for the music box part, plus combs for the bells, drum and castanet, all operated by two very large springs with a central gear.

But the Bornands are not easily discouraged. They set to work, and though the restoration proved a full year's project, the accompanying pictures show the results of their expert labors. The beautiful black cabinet, bronze trimmed, has been rebuilt and refinished—fortunately the exquisite hand-painted porcelain plaques on the front were not damaged. All missing parts were made up and assembled.



Interior of same box, made in Geneva in 1864 for a member of the DuPont family, and converted in 1900 to run electrically, is shown in its restored original condition.

Today, this rare old music box, once so mutilated, is again restored to its original glory, its organ music as beautiful as ever, and the whole, in case and in mechanism, as perfect in every particular as when it was first made to order in Switzerland a hundred years ago.

The Fort Dalles Museum occupies the only remaining building of old Fort Dalles, Oregon, abandoned in 1871. It was once the Surgeon's Quarters and stood at the extreme right of a semi-circle of Officers' Quarters facing the Columbia River, with Mt. Adams to the west. Though the building is still in the process of renovation, exhibits are on view and the Museum is open for visitors. Shown on the steps are Reynolds W. Ohmart and Carl F. Smith of the Salem Geological Assn., who have been researching local history.

Fort Dalles Museum

A Successful Community Project

SLIGHTLY less than one hundred years ago, on a rise overlooking the Columbia River in the brand new state of Oregon, stood Fort Dalles—busy, bustling, important. From the towering flagstaff, Old Glory snapped briskly above parade grounds and bandstand, the half circle row of Officers Quarters, barracks and cookhouses, stables with hundreds of horses and mules, carpenter shops, wagon sheds, smithies — and all the necessary adjuncts to an active Army post.

Today only one building of all the Fort remains to marks its place in frontier history, but local interest has stepped in to make that last survivor a permanent memorial. After the old Fort was abandoned in 1871, the buildings, one after another, succumbed to fire or vandalism, till only the old Surgeon's Quarters was left. Rescued by the determined efforts of the Fort Dalles Historical Society, championed by Mrs. William Shackelford, Mrs. J. M. Marden, Mrs. Wentworth Lord and Mrs. C. J. Crandall, it now serves as the Fort Dalles Museum, under the aegis of the Wasco County-Dalles City Museum Commission working with the Oregon Archeological Society.

Interiors have been repaired according to original specifications, fireplaces have been made safe, floors reconditioned and woodwork refinished. Though work and plans for further restoration are still in progress, relics of frontier days have already found their way to permanent exhibit. The Indian artifacts and gun collections are well worth stopping by to see, and memorabilia from the famed Umatilla House are of special note. Furniture of the period, donated by pioneer families whose fathers brought it across the plains, is kept polished and shining by the appreciative hands of volunteers. An Ironstone tureen from the old Fort Dalles mess is an especially treasured gift.

Additional exhibits of considerable interest, from her personal collections, are loaned, arranged—and rotated regularly—by Mrs. T. Leland Brown of The Dalles, whose active interest in the Museum is most practically demonstrated. Her last year's exhibits included collections of Milk Glass, early housewares, showing woodenware and dairy equipment, cups and saucers, from miniatures to huge mustache varieties, peasant potteries, and Art Glass, featuring Lalique. In arranging her exhibits Mrs. Brown has found that "Spinning Wheel", opened to a story concerned with the current collection, and placed inside it, has done much to enhance interest and create a desire for further research.

Mrs. Brown, who is a capable and inspiring speaker on antiques collecting, is convinced that people who build for the future must cherish the past—and that a local museum is the logical place to foster such interest. Children, from the youngest, are encouraged to visit the Museum, to see their "history" first hand and to take pride in their inheritance. Mrs. Brown makes sure there is always a special grouping to interest them.

Eloquent of the pride and affection the community holds for that special bit of history it is theirs to share, the Fort Dalles Museum beckons to all devotees of the Old Frontier. (Open summer months only, 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., daily except Tuesdays. 25¢ admission.)

Mrs. T. Leland Smith, whose collection of china and pottery numbers some 4,000 pieces, makes a selection of peasant potteries for a special exhibit at the Fort Dalles Museum. This particular exhibit was on view for the coffee, honoring members of the Old Wasco County Pioneers Assn., to which all residents of the community and visitors, as well as pioneers, were invited. In true community spirit, the PEO Sisterhood arranged for refreshments, the Lions Auxiliary took charge of the cleaning, and members of the Museum Commission served as guides and hosts. A silver offering provided guests with an opportunity to do their bit toward the museum upkeep.

Special exhibits for the children encourage an early appreciation of the delightful treasures to be found in historical museums. Here, small chairs, dolls, books and miniature table setting, supplied by Mrs. Brown from her collections, intrigue three young visitors. Piano in background is in rosewood.

Casper A. Wagner Collection An Inspiration To Those Who Would Attempt Restoration Of Old . . .

Music Boxes

By Pearl Haley Patrick

WHEN the Casper A. Wagners of Kansas City, Missouri, finally found the antique music box Mrs. Wagner wanted, there was no doubt that it needed fixing. The finish was stained and marred, the box was battered and rickety, the mechanism refused to start—truly, a silent music box!

It was during World War II, and to find a local repairman with time for civilian pursuits, seemed almost impossible. So, Mr. Wagner, a real estate broker and, at that time, no craftsman, tackled the work of restoration himself. "I didn't know a thing about it and I didn't own half a dozen tools, but I learned", he recalls. "I glued and even nailed with slender brads until the box was square and firm. I took the old finish off with steel wool and lots of elbow grease. Luckily that first box didn't lack any of the mechanical parts, so when I got the mechanism adjusted the tinkley tunes came out clear and sweet."

Forty-odd music boxes later (such being the normal course of a hobby), Mr. Wagner isn't too proud of the job he did on that first box. He points out a faint discoloration on the front and says he didn't rub hard enough. But he can take pride in all the others, and especially in one of the automatic Reginas. It is as big as a juke box, though much sweeter toned, and when purchased was black with repeated paintings. Now it glows with a patina as soft and satiny as one that had been given years of loving care and had required from him only a bit of waxing.

"Refinishing the box, the way I do it, is simple," Mr. Wagner confides. "I just remove the varnish, shellac, enamel, or whatever has been applied throughout the years, by rubbing with steel wool. One doesn't dare remove it any other way. Sometimes there are fine carvings, inlay, ornaments or other delicate wood parts, such as veneer, that any moisture might damage. After every vestige of old finish is off, I stain, if the wood needs a stain, then varnish with a good commercial varnish, and finally, wax. The process takes no special skill, but does require patience and hard work, endless hours of rubbing and polishing.

From top to bottom, Criterion disc music box, American. Cage gilded with gold leaf holds 3 birds with skins and feet of real birds. Each sings true to specie. Believed of French make, ca. 1800. German Kalliope disc music box, ca. 1890.

"Repairing the mechanism is something else. Each box is a law unto itself. Until the 1880's, when American-made music boxes appeared in numbers, each music box was made and finished individually, and the next box, though made by the same craftsman, was never exactly like the first. Even after it became the custom to 'farm out' parts, those parts in foreign-made boxes were not interchangeable.

"That is one reason old music boxes are disappearing from the American scene," Mr. Wagner explains. "When one gets out of order, it is too often just thrown away. It is a pity, for music boxes have a definite place in the pattern of our musical development. For a long time, they furnished the only music non-performers could have in their homes — and served several generations of music lovers.

"So, the works in any music box present a real problem. Sometimes a delicate adjustments can be made, or removal of old hardened oil may help, or even a drop of fresh oil may start the old tunes tinkling again. If a part is missing, the chances for restoration often depend on locating the part for replacement from one of the few specialized dealers."

Every box belonging to the Wagners is beautifully refinished and in working order, but the number in the collection is indeterminate since the models range from the big Reginas through dancing dolls, cages of singing birds and musical watches, and just which can be literally considered "boxes" makes definition difficult.

While we are prone to think of all music boxes as Swiss-made, the French, Germans and Italians also made music boxes, as well as extra parts. German-made discs were preferred, while Swiss cylinders were considered superior.

These handmade mechanical instruments were not simple. Many of them played several tunes from one cylinder, one as many as twelve. Sublime Harmony, a Swiss box, had six tunes per cylinder and two combs which gave the depth of sound of two octaves. A Swiss orchestration made about 1875 has drums, castanets, bells with clappers in the form of silver birds, and a twenty-one note organ operated from a small bellows.

The cylinders, with their delicate pins and the steel toothed combs they touched to make the music, even the device that shifted the carrier a fraction to change tunes on the same cylinder, all had to be wonderfully exact. Meticulous and loving care went into the production of each instrument. Restoration of music boxes requires the same interest and painstaking care.

Another Perplexing
Problem Posed By This . . .

Hook Creamer

THE late Mrs. Minnie Watson Kamm, in her 6th Pitcher Book, pictured, named, and described this creamer thusly, "Some sort of metal rack must have hung from the side-brackets on this creamer and been affixed to the odd little glass hook in front, under the lip. But the why and wherefore of such a contrivance cannot be imagined by the many collectors who have seen this creamer".

Part of the problem has been solved in this recently discovered example, not with a metal rack, but instead with its original matching glass stand, by Louise Cirillo of Castro Valley, California who furnished the above picture with the following information. Both stand and creamer have identical bandings of the heart-like patterning on a finely stippled background giving it a frosty appearance not unlike that found on old Sandwich pieces, though the quality of flint is missing. The side-stands of the base carry the scrolling found on the under part of the pouring lip.

The glass, though not heavy, is of excellent weight and quite brilliant! The side panellings are highly raised and an interesting "circling" treatment is given the handle where it meets the body, which is molded, not applied. The creamer shows two very distinct mold marks front and back. The side holders projecting from the body of the creamer are quite shallow, and each of the two rounding parts has a tiny "point" in its center. The detailing is above average. Even the center of the base has an all-over fine-cut star with a large button for its center, and the spaces between the star points are filled.

The base measures 5" across and 3" between the side arms. Over-all height of the creamer when sitting in the stand is 6", measured to the tip of the lip. Top diameter of creamer is 3" with the lip extending another inch.

A creamer collector's dream and a conversation piece supreme, Mrs. Cirillo calls it, but adds that the small hook still remains a mystery to all who have seen it. For what purpose this hook was intended, or even a guess as to its possible use will be welcomed from any of SPINNING WHEEL'S 40,000 readers. Surely among this number there is someone, somewhere, who can give a lead, at least, on this perplexing little "hook".

Perhaps Mr. Wagner's prize restoration is a gold leaf cage, which holds three singing birds, each boasting real bird feet and feathers and its own particularly lovely song (See illus.). Thought to be about one hundred and fifty years old, it came into his possession, black with soil, and he had to add the art of dry cleaning bird feathers to his other accomplishments. They came out bright and colorful though still, he regrets, a bit ruffled.

Another choice piece in the collection is a rural scene under a large glass dome. The background, a painted mountain scene, shows a tiny chalet and lake, nestling among mountains. When the music plays, a tiny goat browses on the tree foliage, a sheep grazes on the grass, a miniature boat rocks at its mooring and a peasant woman washes clothes in the brook. The glass dome is protected from sudden change in temperature by a heavy cord around its base. This piece, along with one of the Reginas, a Swiss chalet and two or three other favorite music makers stands in the Wagner living quarters.

Other music boxes occupy a basement showroom — a popular place almost filled with music boxes and other hobby collections. Along the way, Mr. Wagner has acquired tools, a work table, a lathe, in fact, a complete workshop. This, too, is in the basement, with most of the tools tucked away in wall cabinets to be brought out as needed. Since restored music boxes must be kept from dampness, a de-humidifier was installed.

Each shining music box is ready to give out its tune, and the many styles and finishes entrance all viewers. Not a bit of their pleasure, and surprise to non-musical box collectors, is that the Wagners can have so many music boxes—and no two alike! Mr. Wagner is, by the way, an active member of the Musical Box Society—International.

than 7,000 volumes of religious and secular music published before 1880, including the earliest manuals for the teaching of vocal and instrumental music, hymn and psalm books. It includes some 45,000 copies of sheet music, many with engraved or lithographed covers which are of great value for their views of cities, historic scenes, and portraits of historic personages and musicians. The collection of patriotic and popular songs dates from the earliest days through the War of 1812. Of especial interest are the broadside songs and ballads without music.

The collection of historical letters is extensive. Notable among these is one to Sir William Johnson from Benjamin Franklin regarding a proposed union to the colonies twenty years before the War of the Revolution.

The history of American commerce is to be found largely in the financial pages of the newspapers and trade journals, such as the "Whaleman's Shipping List," of which the Society has one of the two complete files.

Of invaluable reference value is the large collection of city and business directories and the biographies of prominent business men.

Worth many times their weight in gold are specimens of the earliest coins issued in the colonies. Along with these are the collections of Colonial, Continental and Confederate paper money, also privately issued fractional currency and scrip as well as encased stamps used as currency and commercial tokens. A philatelic treasure is one of the rarest stamps—the Millbury, Massachusetts, postmaster's stamp of 1846.

The remarkably fine Morse Collection of American views on Staffordshire pottery occupies its own small gallery and admirably supplements the extensive collection of early American views in the Print Room.

Many rare recipes are to be found in the collection of some 1200 early American cookbooks—dishes that still hold their savor with the passage of time.

The student of the graphic arts will find much to interest him in the extensive print collection. The collection of eighteenth and nineteenth century American engravings is important, containing nearly all of Paul Revere's engravings. Woodcuts from Foster and Cole are here in profusion and the Charles H. Taylor Collection of American lithographs, with additions from other sources, is the most important in the country from the 1820's through the period of Currier and Ives.

The collection of American bookplates numbers more than 35,000 examples and is the best in existence dating from the early seventeenth century book labels—unadorned affairs consisting merely of a name and a type border.

The library has the first American sporting book, "The Husbandman's Magazine" printed in Boston in 1718 and the first American book on aviation printed in Philadelphia in 1793.

Comparing in value to the Gutenberg Bible is the Bay Psalm Book, dated 1640, the first book printed in North America.

Represented here are half the known number of American incunabula items printed in the United States through 1700—326 titles—it is doubtful if any other library can show so many.

The collection of early juvenile literature is unrivalled in the country and it contains virtually every edition of the scores of Isaiah Thomas' childrens' books. Here you will find vast numbers of very old primers and the earliest extant text of "Mother Goose" printed by Thomas in 1794.

Carefully laid away in cabinets are collections of lacy valentines, bookmarks, rewards of merit and fascinating metemorphosis pamphlets. Along with these are a multitude of the simple games played by our forefathers.

Even American Indian material is included in this comprehensive collection. An example is a seventeenth century Massachusetts Indian deed. There are several hundred volumes in the languages of the American Indian. These include vocabularies, grammars, primers, catechisms, religious tracts, as well as the Bible. A high spot is Thomas Shephard's "Sincere Convert," translated by John Eliot into the language of the Massachusetts Indians and printed in 1669.

This library is no dusty repository of untouchable volumes, for its persistent aim is to assist scholars in the furtherance of their creative efforts. Its facilities are open to the public and authors often remain for months to complete their studies. The library even goes beyond this and each year answers thousands of questions sent in by scholars from all points of the compass. The collection is constantly growing at the rate of some twenty thousand pieces a year. Thus, the library of this Society functions as a vital ideal — bringing to life the dormant and precious data of the past.

How Others Use Their Antiques . . .

Colorful Correspondence

ALL of us are intrigued with the quaint bright flowers, the doves and hands, the deckle edges and silk fringe of old trade cards, Rewards of Merit, calling cards, and the like. Our grandmothers and great-grandmothers, the teenagers of their generations, collected, exchanged and hoarded these fancy bits zealously. They stored them away in fancy candy boxes, or pasted them in the colorful scrapbooks that fascinate us today.

Loose cards of this sort are often to be seen in antiques shops, selling for a few pennies—a temptation that need no longer be resisted on practical grounds, for Mrs. Jean Cowles of Scarsdale, New York, has suggested a delightful use with a thoroughly practical purpose.

Mrs. Cowles has long been a collector of such charming tokens. She has displayed them, studied them, written about them. And she passes on her own enjoyment by mounting the most colorful on note paper which she uses for the many little notes, get-well messages, gift enclosures, and special greetings that make up so great a part of today's correspondence. Such cards, she feels, with their elaborate and often amusing designs, pasted on the outside flap of plain white note paper or informals, transform the ordinary into the unusual correspondence piece.

And what could be more engaging than to receive a box of such notes as a gift—or as a prize? And what a pleasant conversation-starter for the bridge or Canasta party where they are used for invitations, place cards and tallies! (Is it too early to think of Christmas and that "different" little remembrance?)

A selection of note papers assembled by Mrs. Cowles is shown. Most are of the calling card type, though some are Rewards of Merit, and one a strictly advertising card. The dealer's sample cards included give a clue to their original price, which may have greatly influenced their popularity. To illustrate the various sentiments, we have chosen these of special interest:

Reading down: (1) Reward of Merit. "Ye are bought with a price. I Cor. 7-23." (2) Dealer sample visiting card. "40 with name 10¢." (3) Dealer sample. "For cheap visiting cards go to Charles D. Carr, 330 West Ring Street, Lancaster, Pa. 50 elegant visiting cards for 15¢." (4) Visiting cards. "By a bird, send me word If my heart's prayer is heard. Fairy Series 12 for 25¢." (5) Hidden name visiting card. "A token of affection." (6) Trade card. "Saved by Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers. She was young, lovely, rich, and the object of his adoration. He was poor, but talented, and unfortunately time was whitening his beard. So he purchases a mixture with a high sounding name, hoping to obliterate the traces of age." (7) Hidden name visiting card. "Minnie L. Borden." "Accept this as a token slight Of one who holds not friendship light."

ball bed and were delighted to find they matched perfectly. They will be re-united very soon. Such a wonderful thing to happen to me!" We think it was wonderful, too—and we're glad we had a pen-in-hand in introducing two such nice people to each other!

Egg In Sand Or Egg Band: Recently we heard from Mrs. C. R. Byrnes of St. Petersburg, Florida, with a problem. She's been advertising for Egg in Sand pieces, and though she had found several pieces for her collection, she received two pieces, one from Georgia, and one from Chicago, which were sent as Egg in Sand, but only faintly resembled her other pieces. Of course, she immediately inserted Kamm and Lee reference numbers in her ad—but she wondered about the other pattern, which she hadn't been able to identify. We found it under Egg Band, in Kamm's Seventh Pitcher Book. If we must preach lessons from Mrs. Byrnes' experience, we'd say textwise. "Sand, Band! Don't put all your eggs in one basket!"

Americana In Color: To those who enjoyed the black and white photographs of Mark O'Dea's fine paintings of historical antiques in Spinning Wheel, (nov. '55), it will be like greeting old friends to find them in color in the July McCall's. Mr. O'Dea suffered an accident last winter and spent several long months in the hospital—but he's up and painting again now, albeit on crutches. He'll be at antiques shows in Camden, Maine, July 24-27, and at Chatham, Mass., August 28-31, with an exhibition of paintings from his American Gallery of Historic Antiques. It's a "don't miss" for anyone fortunate enough to be in either locality at the right time. When the exhibit is not travelling, it can be seen at Mr. O'Dea's studio at Woodstock, Vermont.

Sympathy: We were saddened to hear from Paul Smith of North Wales, Penna., of the death of his mother, Mrs. J. M. Smith, on June 17. Mrs. Smith has been a collector and dealer in antiques for forty-five years—and a regular advertiser in Spinning Wheel. As such, she is known to many of our readers throughout the country, who will miss her, too.

Family Found: One of those happy coincidences that could only happen to an antiquer occurred at the International Antiques Exhibition at the Coliseum in New York a few weeks ago when Mrs. Ernest Weeks Roberts, a dealer from Wellesley Hills, Mass., wandered casually into the neighboring booth of Markia's Antiques of Boston, and found herself face to face with two "lost" family portraits. She remembered them well from her childhood but no one in her family had ever quite known what had become of them. Markia's was able to tell her only a little of their wanderings — that they had been sold at auction some thirteen years ago, and again the previous month. Needless to say, they're back home again in Mrs. Robert's parlor!
